Committees, Projects, + Programs

Founder, Young People’s Archive

Youth-led and youth-produced digital archive project of the Ed Factory. Using audioethnography and emerging media, YPA documents young people’s experiences as they wrestle with the tangled complexities of self, other, difference, and the crisis of connection. SLiCk (Service Learning Internship Collective), provides undergraduates the opportunity to combine intellectual study, fieldwork, and work in social change organizing. SLiCk Internships involve active engagement with schools, undergraduates and graduate students, K-12 teachers, writers, and community-based workers. Interns become part of a larger community of young people, educators, artists, and worker-writers committed to using the art of social engagement to transform the educational process and challenge notions of difference.

Chair, University at Albany (SUNY) Curriculum and Honors Committee of the Undergraduate Academic Council

University-wide committee to review for approval undergraduate curricular changes, course proposals, and programs. Albany, NY (chair 2017-2018; member 2015-2017).

Co-chair, Bridge to 1:1 Committee

Responsible for middle and high school technology integration and design of creative computing and one-to-one Apple laptop program in grades 5-12 at United Nations International School. UNIS' middle and high school serves approximately 1,300 students from over 120 countries.

Curriculum Designer, Perspectives Charter School

Designed "social justice," "independence and responsibility," and "financial literacy" curricula for "A Disciplined Life" curriculum; grades 10 and 12. Chicago, IL (October 2006-2007).

Research Assistant, Givens Collection of African American Literature at University of Minnesota

Archived the life and work of playwright Endesha Mae Holland. Also archived all incoming correspondence of poets Clarence Major and E. Ethelbert Miller (August 2005-May 2006).

Founder and Director of Corp: An Experiential City as Classroom College Bridge Program for Second-Semester Seniors

Designed, directed, and facilitated a semester-long academic program for cohorts of 20 high school second-semester seniors from independent, public, and charter schools in Chicago, Illinois. On sabbatical from their schools, Corp scholars used the city of Chicago as their classroom. Corp's essential tenets—equity, access, voice, and justice—formed the basis of how scholars explored "city problems." Scholars attended a college class on race in urban education through the Department of Education at University of Illinois at Chicago; engaged in professional, twice-weekly internships with community-based organizations; and designed independent projects with local artists, academics, and community workers. Using mixed media and multimedia, each scholar designed, exhibited, performed, and/or demonstrated a creative project that responded to various social and economic challenges facing the city of Chicago (spring 2003 and 2004).

Race, Redress, and Recovery: A Multimedia Memoir on the Concept of Race

One of eight teachers in Marin County, California, and the only independent school teacher awarded Tech@home's "best creative integration of technology into the classroom curriculum" prize. The award was for a multimedia memoir that my honors level English literature students designed regarding their notions of race (spring 1998).

Speak Out! People of Color in Independent Schools (P.O.C.I.S.) Student of Color Conference

Designed and coordinated a conference for middle and high school students of color from thirty-three San Francisco Bay Area independent schools. Using a creative, artistic approach to dialogue, students openly discussed school issues related to bias and difference within the places in which they felt most comfortable: parked cars. Adults participated only as listeners, stretching themselves across car hoods and leaning into car windows and trunks in order to hear student discussions. Students talked openly as if adults were not present. Discussion topics were chosen by students and focused on social and academic experiences in independent schools and at home; student and adult perceptions of students of color; race, gender, sexuality, and power. Artists Chris Johnson and Suzanne Lacy originally developed the "car concept" in their performance art piece, The Roof Is on Fire! Johnson assisted in the design of Speak Out! (March 1998).

Question Bridge: Marin <-> Brooklyn

Developed an Internet dialogue project in collaboration with Chris Johnson of California College of Arts. Question Bridge used the power of asking as its main mode for dialogue. Racially and economically disparate secondary school students historically misunderstood by each other were encouraged to ask open-ended questions related to their assumed differences. The project asked six wealthy white students from Marin Academy, an independent school in northern California, and eleven working-poor black and Latino/a students from the Brooklyn School for Global Studies, a public school in New York City, to participate in a six-week, online conversation. Students were provided a “zone of no consequences.” In this zone, students asked any question related to privilege, class, and race without fear of criticism, ridicule, or judgment. Discussions were supplemented with a reading of Richard Wright’s Native Son. The online dialogue site was hosted by Mother Jones magazine and featured in its September/October 1997 issue. Currently, this transmedia form has taken on new configurations with Question Bridge: Black Males, which is a transmedia installation co-produced by Chris Johnson and photographer Hank Willis Thomas (spring 1997).
